Three primary typefaces have been selected to provide variety, consistency and legibility on all Pasadena Tournament of Roses communications. While there is flexibility in their usage, following the guidelines provided helps ensure the best possible design outcomes.

GOTHAM TYPEFACE

Gotham is the primary typeface designated for use on all communications. The font’s contemporary, clean look provides excellent legibility along with a casual, friendly feel. The various weights offer the variety needed across multiple mediums and the ability to provide emphasis and differentiation through typography.
COPPERPLATE TYPEFACE

Copperplate is to be used only as an accent font when Gotham will not provide the needed differentiation or design intent. This font should be used sparingly, primarily on headlines, subheads and potentially on captions. It should never be used for setting body copy or any larger copy blocks. The logotypes within the family of marks are built using the Copperplate typeface.
SLOOP SCRIPT TWO LESS SLANT
Sloop Script Two Less Slant is a specialty script which is to be used on a very limited basis. This font is used in conjunction with content that requires a degree of elegance, sophistication or sense of tradition. An example of proper usage of this font would be for communications connected with the Royal Court or Rose Parade. The font must only be used for headlines, ideally those that will appear larger than 16 pt. Exercise caution to ensure legibility when using this font.
COLOR PALETTE

PRIMARY COLOR PALETTE

Each of the Pasadena Tournament of Roses’ logos and marks may be printed with Pantone® coated, Pantone® uncoated or process color inks. Consult your printer to determine how to provide the best color match on the selected paper stock.

Match color reproduction is recommended whenever possible for maximum color brightness and saturation. Refer to the current edition of the Pantone® Color Formula Guide for accurate color matching.

SECONDARY COLOR PALETTE

The secondary color palette is used to provide variety and interest to the Tournament of Roses brand. The colors can be used to differentiate subjects or areas of emphasis in communications. Used judiciously, these two palettes complement the brand’s primary palette.

COLOR TONES

The more saturated color tones are the secondary color palette’s anchor and should provide the foundation for all communications. Care should be taken to create a pleasing hierarchy of color, rather than equal use of all colors. Selecting a more limited palette can often produce better results than trying to use the entire palette.

ACCENTS

The accent palette is just what the name implies, and should be used judiciously where emphasis is desired. The accent palette should always be used subordinate to the “Tones” palette. It is advisable to again select a limited palette of accents on any one piece of communication, rather than trying to use many colors. A pleasing, overall color harmony is the goal.
COLOR PALETTE

HONDA COLOR PALETTE
The Rose Parade logo introduces one additional sponsor color, Honda Red. This color must be used when reproducing the Honda logo and may not be used for any other design elements. The Honda Red must always be used at 100% saturation and may never be screened back to create a lighter tone.

NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL COLOR PALETTE
The Rose Bowl Game logo includes one additional sponsor color, Northwestern Mutual Blue. This color must be used when reproducing the Northwestern Mutual logo and may not be used for any other design elements. The Northwestern Mutual color should always be used at 100% saturation and may never be screened back to create a lighter tone.

2020 ROSE PARADE COLOR PALETTE

Each year, the Tournament of Roses originates a new theme for the Rose Parade. A Rose Parade composite logo is designed to coincide with, and support the new theme. In addition to the primary & sponsorship colors used within the logo, the colors on this page are represented in the logo as well. Care should be taken to create a pleasing hierarchy of color, rather than equal use of all colors. Selecting a more limited palette can often produce better results than trying to use the entire palette. Color harmony is the goal.

INCORRECT LOGO APPLICATIONS

To preserve the brand to the highest standards, the logos should be used as provided. They are not to be altered or modified. When applying the logos to any collateral or digital media, ensure that no other logo or graphic element competes, and the legibility of the logo is crystal clear. On the right are examples of incorrect usage and application.
